

John Miller TOTAL TRANSPARENCY

TOTAL TRANSPARENCY

As of November 22, 2003, Lavalife.com boasted 15,899 registered members. But if you subtract the three phony ads I had to place to check out the site, that number comes to only 15,896. Lavalife ("Where Singles Click") is actually just one of three related Internet dating services. While it caters primarily to heterosexuals, its spin-offs, Manline.com ("From Top to Bottom") and Womanline.com ("Where Women Click"), target gays and lesbians.¹ If this categorical separation is supposed to streamline dating, it also presumes de facto segregation by sexual orientation. Hence, I registered in each category. Hence, my three respective identities: TangoTantraTea, Brown Bear 1 and Tea Drop. On each site, after creating a profile, you choose at least one of three subcategories: Dating, Relationships and Intimate Encounters (bluntly called "Sex" at Manline). Of course, some choose all. This overlapping means that the total number of members might be far less than the nearly 16,000 Lavalife boasts. Regardless of the total prospects, my goal was not to find a partner, but rather to acquaint myself with the protocols of Internet dating and to see what this burgeoning trend might mean.

Anyone can sign onto Lavalife, Manline or Womanline, no strings attached. You need only specify whether you are a man or woman and whether you are seeking a man or a woman. Then you set an age range and enter your zip code. Members appear by nickname. Real names are prohibited. You can browse the entire data base or search by category. Besides nicknames, these include "online," "new" and "quick search." The latter allows you to search by sex, region, age or pictures – plus sexual preference in Intimate Encounters. Each entry includes a nickname, a tag line and pictures, if any. An optional blurb may also provide the member's vital statistics, city, astrological sign, smoking and drinking habits plus how recent the entry is. Free browsing is designed to pique your interest. Lavalife assumes that once you see what it offers, you'll want to become a member yourself.

Despite the subtle coaxing, I balked at writing my own profile. Doing so undercut my presumption of detached investigation – or detached voyeurism, if you will. Although interaction is the point online, I wanted to keep my aloofness intact. Moreover, no one should ever have to write his own personals ad.

Old-style ads, i.e., those appearing in print, are typically written from scratch. Despite the battery of readymade acronyms, code words and special jargon, with these, the burden of self-representation falls to the individual advertiser. Then, once the ad appears in print, the wait for a postcard or phone call begins. Internet dating, however, has changed all that.

Now each aspect of any potential encounter is more nuanced, less pressured and almost instantaneous. Lavalife's format centers on a multiple-choice questionnaire, replete with pull-down menus that offered plenty of tips and encouragement. Other, hipper services typically ask applicants simply to answer one or two questions from a list: "Last book read?" "Celebrity you most resemble?" "Things found in your bedroom?" "Most embarrassing moment?" Clearly, this approach is supposed to generate a simulacrum of small talk. Lavalife is more data-oriented.

In just a few short years, the online dating industry has generated a huge number of sites, each laying claim to a particular format or clientele. Yet, in concert, all of them have filtered out everything that, not long ago, seemed illicit or quixotic about personals ads. They have successfully cultivated an ethos of fun, negotiable sexuality and made it as convenient as checking email. In turn, the ensuing, rapid popularization of online dating has made it tasteful. Any stigma once attached to personal ads has disappeared completely. As a joking testament to this trend, Time Out New York recently ran a cover story called "Offline Dating."

Lavalife makes signing up easy. First, you must choose a member ID and password, give an email address for verification and confirm that you are at least 18 years old. Before continuing, you must accept the company's "Terms of Use."² You'd probably just click the "Accept" button without bothering to read through these. Then, after creating a unique nickname and an opening line, you provide information about your gender, birth date, address, height, body type, ethnicity, religion and smoking and drinking habits. You can choose whether to automatically display all this or to do it selectively. Curiously, the question of occupation or profession never arises. Next, from drop-down menus you pick your idea of a fun date (anything from mini-golf to window shopping), your favorite topics of conversation (astrology to world politics), how you think your friends would describe you (cynic to touchy-feely) and – in Intimate Encounters – your sexual proclivities (conventional sex to domination and submission). All this information will appear under the heading "Since You Asked." The logic of these menus implicitly legitimates "every" option seemingly open to any individual; differentiation thus becomes a serial, agreed-upon process. The variability of sexual practices also appears to be categorical and such categorization makes transgression a moot point. The social process itself is represented as a kind of readymade. Volition, accordingly, approximates the ability to use a menu.

After finishing this questionnaire, you become a “Free Member.” Now, not only does your profile appear online, but you can start using some of the site’s other features. Various combinations of icons surround each entry. These enable members to contact each other. If you like the looks of someone, you can check the “Select Members to View” box. You also might add that person to your Hot List. As a confidence booster, Lavalife lets members know if they’ve been Hot Listed – but without saying by whom. If you’re feeling more direct, you can flirt by sending a smiley face icon, free of charge. Clicking a dog tag yields supplemental “In My Own Words” information. Since this is optional, not all the ads include dog tags. A blurb icon shows whether someone is online and can receive instant messages. These, however, you have to pay for – by purchasing blocks of prepaid credits. In so doing, you graduate to “Full Member” status. Also, if someone you want to reach is not online, you can always send an email by clicking a letter icon. This too costs credits. Other icons include “Backstage,” “Local Members,” “Message History” and, ominously, “Block.” In short, although it costs nothing to be featured by Lavalife, you must pay to communicate.

Underlying this highly articulated framework is the highly economical substrate of the Internet itself. Compared to pricey – thus abbreviated – print ads, the Internet is information-intensive and cheap. So, in addition to your basic profile, Lavalife suggests you say something in your own words and offers these tips: 1) be honest, 2) be unique and 3) be interesting. Yet, immediately after counseling honesty, the guidelines turn around and tell you to “avoid overused words like clean, trustworthy [and] honest.” You should concentrate instead on what makes you unique. To get a better feel for this, they then suggest you use what others have written as a template: “... take a moment to read other people’s profiles in that area. See how people communicate, what language is acceptable and how you can make your own profile stand out in a good way.” I myself felt conflicted, though not as a result of this contradictory advice. I wasn’t concerned with dating, but rather how advertisers represent themselves on this site and – more speculatively – how they come to see themselves vis-à-vis these representations. In other words, I wanted to know what Lavalife wanted to know about me – or, more precisely, how my prospective soul mate and I would be able to recognize each other in the terms set forth by the dating service. But I didn’t really know all this right at the beginning. I just wanted to get through this as soon as possible. The importance of this initial threshold didn’t completely register at first. Instead, while going through the motions of misrepresenting myself, I fixated on a strange compulsion to be – like Lavalife said – honest.

A picture may be the most critical part of any ad. Lavalife maintains that a picture can better your chances by about seven-fold. But that, of course, must depend on how good you look, or at least how good your picture looks. Lavalife offers some tips concerning basic portraiture. Don’t use blurry shots. Keep it simple. Make sure you appear large enough. Use recent shots. Above all, don’t include contact information in these pictures or other people. Finally, Lavalife says you should pick photos that “fit their area,” i.e., photos that seem appropriate to the subcategory in which they appear. For example, sexy shots are supposed to fit Intimate Encounters better than Relationships. You can supplement your portrait with more candid “Backstage” photos. These might be anything from pets and vacations to artwork or your back yard. You can also add nude pictures so long as they don’t suggest sexual activity. In particular, your photos should not show: i) states of arousal, ii) you touching yourself or iii) bodily fluids. Your pictures may also be rejected if they include: i) illegal activity, drugs or drug paraphernalia, ii) copyrighted images, iii) celebrities or iv) blank or poor quality images. Someone can only view your Backstage photos with your permission. “Most of all,” says Lavalife, “smile!”

Yet even good pictures of good-looking people can kill the kind of abstract fantasy print ads generate. I still wanted to dwell within the realm of abstraction. Although I never expected anyone to contact me for a date, the pressure I felt to be sincere tweaked my profile more toward mild self-parody than arbitrary fabrication. I took the name Tango Tantra Tea. My tag line was innocuous: “Let’s get to know each other.” I checked off boxes indicating that my income is below $25,000 and that my idea of a fun date would be attending a lecture. I claimed to reside within the 90036 zip code. I shaved ten years off my age. My opening line was passive-aggressive, “There’s more to life than hot tubs.” (This was, after all, California.) I snobbishly averred that my friends all thought I’d be better off on the East Coast. I did not submit pictures. Then I hesitantly clicked the “done” button.

It soon became apparent I was not the first to dissemble an online identity. Many routinely create multiple online alter egos, partly because it’s easy and painless, partly because it’s fun. In this vein, one Midwestern college junior quipped, “Real life is just one more window ... and it’s not usually my best one.”³ In stark contrast to my initial bout of soul searching, creating my gay and lesbian profiles was a snap – especially because I used Tango TantraTea as a template. As before, I invoked worn-out erotic clichés, assuming that, in this fast-moving context, to be out fashion is to be undesirable. Just as the tango has devolved into a faint memory of straight middle-class desperation, so a hot mug of cocoa signifies an outmoded form of lesbian bonding: “a mug of hot cocoa might be nice.” My gay persona, Brown Bear 1,⁴ was more playful. My tag line – “a burbling bag of cytoplasm” – mocked anyone who might approach me. Yet I also let it be known I thought I could be charming:⁵ “a hedonist, a social butterfly, always ready to party.” Ironically, the point of these small jokes may have been – deliberately or not – to telegraph a reluctance to initiate the dating process. After several months it seems that at least I’ve succeeded in that; I have not received a single response. But I have checked out plenty of other ads that are clearly more effective.

My interest in Internet dating is an outgrowth of an ongoing investigation of personals ads. Since 1987 I have used them as material for my artwork. The first time I reproduced ads from New York Magazine and Screw on plastic signs that were part of a sculpture. Both ads were taken out by straight men. The first described himself as a corporate CEO and stressed his love of “the arts,” fine dining and opera. In so doing, he invoked the impressive reserves of both financial and cultural capital supposedly at his disposal. These, presumably, would guarantee access to more desirable women. The second man described the woman he sought metonymically, i.e., via her genitalia – oddly enough “a woman whose pussy cream shoots out.” Did he really want “a woman” with semen? Ironically, it was his aggression that most aggressively marked his subaltern social status. This ad’s libidinal language telegraphed a kind of asocial impotence: more an end in itself than an effective means of meeting anyone. I understood the contrast between these ads to be an enactment of social hierarchialization. It’s possible that the two men could have been seeking the same woman, but the first ad distinguishes itself through an appeal to estheticism and sublimation. Yet the stubborn homology between these two apparently contrary positions remains. (In my sculpture I tried to indicate this by placing one sign upside down in relation to the other.) Ultimately, though, I came to believe my juxtaposition attributed overly patriarchal values to a set of sexual practices that, at that time, may have been more diverse than those sanctioned by the mainstream.

Thirteen years passed before I worked with personals ads again. In the interim, they continued to haunt me. As a social form, they do achieve a kind of desublimation, albeit abortively. At the very least, these ads constitute a demand for gratification now, not later – just as Herbert Marcuse once prescribed. Yet their libidinal promise falls short of any social transformation. Instead, they reconstitute prevailing social hierarchies as a sign of free subjectivity. In other words, by having to represent themselves in terms of a real or imagined market, advertisers construct identities that reiterate dominant ideology’s terms of repression. What first purports to be an unfettered expression of inner selfhood ends up mirroring an external social order.

I wanted my new personals project to be able to articulate principles of social hierarchy better than the first. I turned to Pierre Bourdieu’s notion of social fields, which has the distinct ability to articulate different kinds of social struggles organized around particular interests. For data, I chose two hundred twenty ads from the May 1, 2001 Village Voice. I assigned each a number. Then I analyzed each according to criteria set forth by the advertisers themselves: race, religion, marital status, health, drug addiction, age, sexual orientation and social assets (financial vs. cultural capital). Next, I set up four graphs that paired different criteria as x- and y-axes. Finally, I plotted the ads across far-flung social fields, showing the dispersal of positions. What the graphs primarily made explicit were the differential relations within the entire group as a corpus. Following the Village Voice project, I conducted similar analyses of ads from German and Japanese publications.⁶ In each case, the decision to graph in itself, by exposing latent ideology, revealed more than any of the findings per se.⁷

Curiously, Lavalife’s emphasis on profiling approximates my concern with market-driven identity-formation, but Lavalife treats this as a matter of hard facts, not social constructs. In a recent survey of online dating sites, Seventeen Magazine, in fact, faults this approach for being governed too much by set categories. The idea derives from what, in the late 1970s, was called computer dating. At that time, rather than posting ads, customers would submit forms to a computer dating service and, for a fee, receive a list of prospective compatible dates. Belief in the efficacy of this process relied on the then “mystique” of the computer. In essence, it was nothing more than a database. The matching process remained relatively crude, especially because the number of users never reached a critical mass.

The arrival of personal computers and the Internet demystified computing, yet made online dating a viable option. In the last six years, the market has mushroomed. Users have gotten more sophisticated. They have demanded more from dating services and – in the end – they got it. Lavalife’s advance was to build a feedback mechanism into the basic database. This made the profile categories somewhat more negotiable.

Since I could not work with the ads of all 15,896 Lavalife members, I decided to focus on those living within ten miles of the 90036 zip code – namely, the location of Richard Telles Fine Arts where I planned to present my project. A ten-mile radius, by the way, was the smallest geographical parameter I could set in my searches. My initial search yielded about 220 ads. After I weeded out the duplicates, this number shrank to 166. These I graphed according to age and three other criteria: sexual preference, income and drinking habits. Unlike previous studies, age appears as a constant in all three graphs. Within sexual preference (is sexuality “a preference?”), the notion of conventional sex proved to be a self-fulfilling prophecy: the majority choice by definition. Even so, enough entries appeared outside this field to suggest that the convention is elastic. Conversely, the paucity of overall entries in all income categories suggests that applicants were embarrassed by two things: too much money or too little money. In both, my primary conclusion – as before – was self-reflexive: that these designations established mutually recognizable forms of social status. The results for drinking habits, however, could not have been more extreme: a clump of numbers, so dense as to be illegible, at the graph’s dead center. Vertically, the data was concentrated within a 42–22 years-old range, which is not surprising, since these are the prime dating ages. On the horizontal axis, the overwhelming number of entries fell into the “social drinker” range. This suggested a high degree of conformity among those who date most actively. Drinking appears to be not only a social asset, but also a requisite form of sociality in and of itself. To the left, in the “don’t drink” category, was a smattering of about twenty entries. Although their dating field was considerably narrower, many took pride in their ethos of clean living and self-control. To the right of center were three – more or less – pariahs who inexplicably confessed to drinking often. And, by consensus, “often” meant too much. This suggests that, at least within the online dating community, alcoholism is stigmatized far more than alternative sexual practices. Of course, all these self-subscribed categories are highly relative. If three glasses of wine with dinner means social drinking to one, it just as easily could mean “often” to another. All of the criteria through which members identify each other are subject to the conditions of their reception. “Stylish” means one thing in West Hollywood, quite another in the Valley. More often than not, total transparency is the fantasy of transparency.

As a counterpoint to this analysis I produced fifteen photographs. First I asked Tamara Sussman to shoot different kinds of sites roughly within ten miles of Richard Telles’ gallery. These included: a parking garage (inside), a court, a church, a police station, a university, a bar, a club, a restaurant, a living room, a bedroom, a bathroom, a kitchen, a closet, a park (secluded spot), an abandoned house, a pedestrian underpass, a highway, a truck stop, a rest stop, a public toilet, a car (interior), a trailer park, an amusement park, a stadium, a town square, a mall and a telephone booth. Here, my thinking was that various spatial codes sanction or prohibit sexual behavior in these places. I selected fifteen photos from what she shot and superimposed Lavalife ads over them. In two, I put together a sequence of negatives to produce a panorama. For these, I superimposed just fragments from several different ads to create the effect of a chorus. In all the images I wanted to contrast concrete space as a social form with the symbolic social space of the online ad. This combination, however, is rather oblique. The only common denominator may be a loosely shared locality. The implications are accordingly murky. In terms of genre, they are both portraits and landscapes. The superimposition of type over an image suggests a screen or transparent layer. The type inevitably assumes the authority of a caption.

The ultimate goal of information networks, as envisioned by Microsoft’s Bill Gates, is “to put the producer in direct contact with the consumer, regardless of the distance between them.” Michael Hardt and Antonio Negri further observe that, “If Gate’s vision were to be realized, the networks would tend to reduce all distance and make transactions immediate.”⁸ If this prospect seems outlandishly utopian, remember that “direct contact” always involves a middleman – be it Microsoft or Lavalife – who seeks profit from the transaction in question. The very idea of advertising for a partner is predicated on at least five historical factors: i) a critical, i.e., cosmopolitan, mass of advertisers and readers; ii) human sexuality construed as a kind of market; iii) the relative equality (thus, exchangeability) of partners and competitors; iv) the ability to construe mating as a form of consumption or leisure activity; and v) a concomitant rationalization of sexuality itself.

In a perfect market, the advertiser would choose from a sea of respondents, having only to decide which would make the best match. Of course, according to the conventional laws of supply and demand, the better the market is for the advertiser, the worse it ought to be for the respondent. But that’s not the case. With internet dating, supply and demand are one and the same. Thus, the conventional market offers only an inadequate model. Users of online dating services are engaged in what Negri and Hardt call “communicational and immaterial labor.” The advertisers’ spontaneous production entails both the affective and abstract aspects that Negri and Hardt say typify this new mode of labor. Seen collectively, the service that companies like Lavalife ostensibly offer is to make the desires of the masses intelligible to the masses themselves. Of course, it is arguable whether online dating services facilitate or impede this process. Curiously, it was former Yippie Jerry Rubin who coined the term “networking.” Rubin used it to describe social events he staged for the emergent Yuppie class of the early 1980s. These were occasions for Yuppies to make both romantic and business contacts. To the extent that tactical anarchism gave way to the desire for systemic efficiency, Rubin’s case exemplifies – even inadvertently parodies – what Marx called “the negation of the negation.” Business-wise, whether the online dating industry can extract any substantial profit from the spontaneous, affective production of the newly computerized masses is not yet clear. “I have a real problem finding a business model here,” recently observed Nate Elliot, an analyst with Jupiter Research. “It feels like the early days of the Internet, with sites like Globe.com saying they’ll aggregate tens of millions of users, then find a way to monetize them.” Others, like Mark Pincus of Tribe.net believe, “The network is the marketplace.”⁹ At the very least, if the online dating industry has not exactly created a viable market, it has created new sets of desires and needs.

Seemingly opposed to market-based rationalization and instrumentalization is the romantic notion of fate. Walter Benjamin proposed that, “Fate and character are commonly regarded as causally connected, character being the cause of fate.” Taken to extremes, this implies a reduction of the external world to internal subjectivity. Such a belief might stem from urban experience – compensating for the degree of anonymity and displacement the city regularly exacts on its inhabitants. Also arising from the urban milieu is what Benjamin called “love at last sight.” In this chance scenario, someone falls in love with a stranger he or she will never see again. Curiously, this encounter reduces internal subjectivity to the happenstance conditions of the external world. A whole category of ads – not exactly personals – attempts to recover these missed opportunities: “You, the red-haired woman at the news stand. Me, the man in the grey shirt who lit your cigarette ...” In a New York Times Magazine feature on the dating industry, Jennifer Egan linked these outcries to the very scale of mass culture, “Serendipitous love as a romantic ideal is a paean to cities and their dislocations, the unlikely collisions that result from thousand of strangers with discrete histories overlapping briefly in time and space. And online dating is not the opposite of this approach to love, but its radical extension. If cities erase people’s histories and cram them together in space, online dating sites erase both cities and space, gathering people instead under the virtual rubric of a brand.”¹⁰ It would be more accurate, however, to say that online dating is neither the extension nor the negation of love at last sight, but rather the sublation of it, preserving some aspects while negating others. If virtual courtship militates against both history and space, it nonetheless attempts to eradicate chance. Thus, the final fantasy of the dating network is not only to make character entirely legible, but also to subject fate, the supposed result of character, to an administrative structure.

For his 1971 “Variable Piece #70 (In Process) Global,” Douglas Huebler stated. “Throughout the remainder of the artist’s lifetime he will photographically document, to the extent of his capacity, the existence of everyone alive in order to produce the most authentic and inclusive representation of the human species that may be assembled in that manner.” He added that “Editions of this work will be periodically issued in a variety of topical modes: ‘100,000 people’, ‘1,000,000 people’, ‘10,000,000’, ‘people personally known by the artist', 'look-alikes', 'overlaps', etc."¹¹ Huebler went on, as promised, to exhibit these installments, typically photos of crowds and small groups. Captions for these installments ascribed certain qualities to the individuals depicted therein: "At least one person who is the life of the party" or "At least one person who is pathologically modest." And so on. While this oddly sprawling-but-whimsical work concerns unknowability, failure and impotence, the photographer-critic Allan Sekula saw it as a harbinger of total surveillance. Lavalife's current TV ad campaign curiously echoes Variable Piece #70. It too features images of groups. All of them are attractive, young and date-able. In them, a few faces are circled and captioned with fragments from personals ads. One wonders why Lavalife doesn't instead simply run ads and pictures of individual members. This campaign, however, is not about whether Big Brother knows who you are and what you do, but instead about everyone's inability to know enough about each other. If this does nothing to mitigate the onset of total surveillance (cell phones with digital cameras are just the latest wrinkle), it nonetheless captures the collective aspiration for total transparency as a (crassly) utopian impulse. Although this quest may ultimately prove to be a hall of mirrors, it is the unconscious that ultimately defies not only surveillance, but online dating as well.

Brym and Dr. Rhona L. Lenton, "Love Online: A Report on Digital Dating in Canada" (Toronto: msn.ca, 2001), p. 9. This suggests that Lavalife.com is a subsidiary of Webpersonals. In addition to its Internet service, Lavalife offers phone dating as well.
- 2 Among its salient points are: i) Lavalife's unilateral right to terminate service, ii) confidentiality, iii) prohibition of harassment and offensive behavior, iv) prohibition of plagiarism and copyright infringement, v) prohibition of using the site for commerce and, most important to Lavalife's commercial interest, vi) a prohibition against posting your own address, telephone number or email address on the site.
- 3 Brym and Lenton, p. 8.
- 4 Since there was already a Brown Bear registered with Lavalife, this technically made me "Brown Bear 2." This duplication also suggests that my chosen moniker was more viable than that of my straight and lesbian selves.
- 5 This "friends' description," of course, is really the member's fantasy see of how friends see him or her. Within the logic of the questionnaire, this may be an attempt to invoke the super-ego as a reality principle.

- 7 This is not to say that the findings were utterly superfluous. The Voice ads showed a marked racial fixation that set them apart from their German and Japanese counterparts. The German ads tended to split the rhetorical difference between empiricism and allegory. The Japanese ads, explicitly admitting loneliness and depression, showed no adherence to Western-style "fun morality." (This is the obligation to have fun "whether you want to or not.")

"I hate dating."

I'm usually kinda busy. But I have lots of free time. Does that make sense? I don't do bars, so there goes meeting 90% of the girls in this city. To tell you the truth, most girls in this city do not interest me, because they only want to know what kind of car I drive instead of what kind of man I am. I am not impressed with money. Life is not about $$$. There is so much more to life than that. Of course it doesn't hurt to have it though. I'm pretty fun to be around, and want to find someone who has a good sense of humor. Maybe even twisted sense of humor. Don't worry, I'll get it. I'm really non judgmental. I am the kind of guy who would like to do some thing fun during the day, and then cook dinner and get a good DVD at night. I am looking for more than dating eventually. I am at the age where I am ready to settle down now. So if this is not something you're interested in, then please pass me up. Good luck to every one on finding what you are looking for.

"GWM mannextdoor workoutreg professional sincere looking 4 U"

Hi, I am a GWM just moved back to Los Angeles (WEHO) after being away for 4 years. I am interested in meeting guys to date. I am looking for guys who are self-assured but not totally into themselves, who have a big heart, intelligent – who can with ease keep up with any conversation. Height does not matter but should be in good shape. You should be HIV-, nonsmoker and over 25 and under 40. I am romantic at heart, but I do not fall in love quickly, like to get to know the guy first. I am HIV – and a nonsmoker and workout regularly and try to eat well. I am a professional and have several degrees. I am extremely analytical but like to have fun as well! Our first meeting should not be full of pressure, not looking to marry on the first date, simply looking to find cool guys where chemistry might be possible. I am mostly attracted to white guys and while not mandatory I am a sucker for brown eyes. Take a chance, if not good – luck on your search!

7. ANOTHERLAGUY

"Pick Me!! Pick Me!!"

Wow ... incredible ... that opening line actually worked!! Hmm, now what to say. Well, everyone else seems to say that 100 characters is a lot to write, writes about how they've never done this before and don't know what to say, how they couldn't find good people other ways, describes how great they are, and then what they want you to be like. That seems like a lot of writing, so I'll just skip the fluff. If you want to know all that stuff send, me an IM and I'll tell you. Now let's see if I can do this in one sentence:

I want the same thing that everyone else wants on this; to find someone with which they can fall in love, and I don't know who you have to be for that to happen, because if I knew I wouldn't have to post ads to figure out who you were.

Ok, that was a bit of a run-on, so I've probably lost all the English teachers. I'll just shut up now before I ruin my possibilities with anyone else. Write me, or at least send me a smile. :)

8. ATHLNLA

"Masculine, athletic, down to earth seeks same"

Great guy would like to meet local men of substance. Ideally, you are in good shape, youthful, handsome, confident and thoughtful of others.

Would like to meet and date someone who has his act together. Someone with direction and passion in their life. Someone who really enjoys life and doesn't sweat the small stuff. Someone who, like myself, wants to experience all that life has to offer, but would rather share them with their best friend and partner.

I'm an active guy and loves being in the great outdoors and working out, so it's important you enjoy and are capable of participating in this sort of stuff. Love to mountain bike and road bike, hike, jog, blade, snow ski and play tennis. I'm good at most sports and naturally prefer to play rather than watch, but will watch an occasional basketball/soccer game or tennis match on tv.

I'm a pretty easygoing guy, warm, honest, spiritual (not religious) monogamous, and passionate under the sheets. I also think romance is very cool, and highly under-rated. Other passions include practicing yoga, my many old buddies back east, family, fine arts, music, growing and building stuff, architecture, joking around – hey, life is short :) – and possibly you if the chemistry works!

Please be HIV neg. like me and have a pic to exchange if you reply. So Cal area preferred, but then again there are exceptions to every rule ... So what's stopping you!

"Umm ... i seem to have misplaced my monkey."

I have a good, sometimes ridiculous, sometimes bordering on tasteless, sense of humor.

I'm smarter than the average bear.

I will try just about anything, even if it doesn't seem like my style.

I love to discuss politics,, religion, the merits of reality television, and just about anything else.

I'm girly. I coo over kitties and puppies. I like scented candles, the color pink, skirts, and makeup. And I watch sappy, romantic comedies with girlfriends.

But not too girly. I own more than one video game system. I occasionally swear like a sailor. And I will never avoid work for fear of breaking a nail.

I won't put any stake in what your job is, how much money you make, or what kind of car you drive, as long as you do what you enjoy or enjoy what you do.

I want to be thoroughly used up when I die. I find laughter in life and find a reason to smile everyday. I believe in love and longing for that person when I'm not with them. I like to sometimes be alone, but most of the time around people, when all else fails, the dogs and cats don't talk back ... I love scuba, the beach, cooking, (anything and good at it)! Music I can understand, great wine finds, meeting new people, seeing the world through someone else's eyes (new Perspective), especially children, their innocence is great, their laughter contagious. I am a compassionate person, thoughtful, cute, and sometimes a little insecure, sometimes I want to be an adult and sometimes I don't. The person I most wish to be with, understands that I can be moody, not like myself on certain days, be selfish and giving at the same time, they need to be able to hear me, even when I don't speak, comfort me when my anger isn't really founded, its just a bad day. Celebrate with me everyday just because ... still there? Then email me if you are at least 38, up to 55, at least 5'10, fit, stable of mind and secure of self ... oh, financially stable would be nice also. Honesty counts ... right?

If all you have been having are toilet seats recently, I've got just what you need. In and out ... up and down ... in the kitchen ... in the library ... in the bedroom ... in the shower. You'll love it! You'll squeal like a pig and bark like a dog wanting that bone again in your nice round ...

"Life is so much more fun when you let go of that Puritan thing. Life's too short not to do this!"

Delivery Guy? Ok, it's a porno joke. I don't really want to pretend I'm delivering a 'package' to you, but, then, I'm not closed to the idea, either! Seriously, we should be European about this. America is great, but we're way, WAY too upright about sex. You can have casual sex and still have respect, honesty, and friendship. I know, because I do it all the time. Nobody lies, and everyone feels good. Hot crazy screwing is nice, too. Smiles all around, and be well.

39. DOKTOR GONZO

"Looking for trouble?"

Blonde/6'3"/175lbs Green eyes.

In Los(T) Angeles, two years, weeks lost like pencils and months lost like the remote control to your idea of where life was supposed to be. I forgot to remind myself never to forget the importance of something I think ... not sure, I think I forgot.

The book sits there, as I idly try to formulate the next coherent thought to add to it. No use. I live in a cave, barely get out. Then there is work, the other cave, no light ... shhhhhh ... nothing worse than losing a year or two in the blink of an eye, up to your ears in work the whole time. Enough. Need to get out.

40. DREAMY321

"Will you follow me down the rabbit hole?"

WARNING: If you're looking for a beefy, macho, 'rough-n-tumblin-type-of-guy' then you've definitely come to the WRONG PLACE.

I'm a 30-year old artist looking to meet an intelligent, compassionate girl who isn't afraid to challenge herself. The world is getting pretty crazy these days, so I'm only interested in meeting positive people.

I live a pro-active and creative lifestyle and am constantly striving towards bettering myself as a human being. That being said, I like to have fun along the way and try as best I can to enjoy everything in the moment. Therein lies the journey.

Movies and music play huge roles in my life. If you were to look inside my DVD player, you'd probably find something along the lines of "Memento" or "Rushmore" while my CD player would be shuffling between "Bjork", "Jeff Buckley" and "The Chemical Brothers".

Here are some important things you should know about me:

- 1) I believe Michael Jackson is innocent.
- 2) You will never EVER see me at a Square Dance.
- 3) I made my mother cry last week but was man enough to make it up to her with a loving hug.
- 4) At 14, I had the distinct privilege of yelling BINGO! I was forced to split the $200 pot with an elderly woman who went by the name 'Misty'. Well then, if you're still reading this then it's time to take it to the next level. Feel free to drop me a line and tell me about yourself. I go for personality first but physical attraction is definitely important to me so I would appreciate a photo of your general likeness. Thanks for your time. Have in common?

41. DRZHIVAGO

"Music lover looking for a Love Supreme"

I'm a nice, low-maintenance guy. I have a good sense of humor (although quirky at times) and can usually talk about anything. I am really serious about my career and would consider myself very ambitious.

I have a lot of different interests and I always like to try new things. I'm a big music fan, especially 60's rock, Brit pop, indie music, and jazz (Velvet Underground, the Who, Stone Roses, Belle and Sebastian, John Coltrane, among others). My favorite tvshows are the Simpsons, Seinfeld reruns, and Curb Your Enthusiasm. I am always reading and enjoy the classics and history books – the longer the better (War and Peace is my favorite novel). I like to travel a lot (Rio, New York, Vancouver, San Francisco, and Boston are my favorite places). I like sports and am a big Dodger and UCLA fan.

I'm looking for someone with similar interests that has an adventurous spirit. I'm a very giving, loyal, and dependable person and hope to find someone that is the same.

"People shouldn't be held accountable for the peripheral elements in their life."

I'm very comfortable in my own skin, which is a rich caramel complexion. I have Asiatic eyes, big lips and strong thighs. I am an extremely open person who's had enough misadventures to develop a personality, but none so serious as to permanently derail me. I think that what most interests me about this site is the idea of meeting someone far removed from my past experiences.

I'm really excited by the chance encounter of meeting through here, but probably will always prefer a warm human exchange over coffee, to the idea of long conversations over a computer. Hopefully, you like where I am coming from and we can have the next conversation face to face.

60. GUYINHWOOD

"Hey, I'd date me ..."

Never married, no kids. I love to have fun ... camping in the summer and snowboarding in the winter to dancing 'til dawn. I also surf, play guitar and take pictures now and then. I maintain a positive attitude, and I always have a smile to give. Friends would say I'm intelligent, open minded, easy to talk to (and a great listener, too), honest, fun, dependable, trusting, and a man of integrity ... I gave up raising my voice in anger years ago when I realized once you start yelling, how you say things becomes more important than what you are saying. I love to get out of town for weekends (Mammoth or San Diego usually), and really want to start traveling more. My idea of a good evening at home would be pleasant and stimulating conversation over a bottle of wine rather than renting a movie or watching tv. I like to read (anything and everything), but never seem to have enough time. I'm a news junkie, and like to stay up on what's going on in the world. I love music, but tend to shy away from the mainstream. I like to dance to house music, techno and hip-hop, and I listen to everything including punk, rock, industrial, blues, and oldies ... I have three tattoos and no readily visible scars. I open doors, pull out chairs, and will always offer my coat. The most important thing is chemistry. There is nothing without that. But some things that would also be important are these: You've got to have a positive attitude, and smile often. Honesty, integrity, compassion and respect are all things I'd like to get back from a woman. There's nothing more attractive than a secure, self-assured woman. You should be as comfortable on a chairlift or beach as you are dressed to kill for a night out. Taking care of yourself physically is important, but you shouldn't be constantly calculating your body fat ratio and counting carbs. But again, chemistry is most important for me.

Have in common?

My idea of romance includes: a weekend getaway, a picnic, flowers for no reason

In my spare time I enjoy: snowboarding, listening to music, and playing a musical instrument

"Are u smiling right now?"

Hi there,

I'm just a simple guy who wants to go out and have some fun; I work hard and like to spend my time doing the most relaxing things I can with the most enjoyable company I can find. I want some one who can get goofy and play around and just be yourself around me, totally and completely open just loving life and laughing at its faults.

I seem to be around too many people nowadays who care more about their cars and money and looking good. I figured out that you can end up with all those things without having them control your life, and then you don't lose yourself which is the most important thing, knowing what gives you a smile, or what brings a happy tear to your eye, genuine people. Someone who isn't taken by all the world's superficial stuff.

Is that you? If it is you're probably smiling right now 'cause you know exactly what I'm talking about! Send me a message because I've been looking everywhere for you ...

70. ITINERANT_SPIRIT

"Hi!"

Well, let's see ... I've worked in the Newport Beach/Costa Mesa area for the past five years and moved down to OC from LA about three years ago. Prior to that I had grown up and gone to college in the Bay Area. I work in real estate and am self-employed, doing work in development and brokerage. I'm interested in meeting someone who is decent, honest, relatively self-aware and has a positive outlook on life, who is well educated and enjoys travel, who's attractive and who places a high value on communication. Or at least someone who fits, say, two-thirds of those criteria. I'm pretty laid-back myself ... I've been through some serious relationships and I'm not anxious to jump back into another too quickly, but when the right person comes along I'll know it. In the meantime, I'm interested in dating some interesting people, hopefully expanding my pool of friends, and taking things from there. I enjoy pretty much anything and I treat people well and with respect. Look forward to hearing from you!

"Let's keep it simple and share some laughs."

Let's keep it simple – looking for good company and hopefully lots of laughs and then see what happens from there. I'm actually just looking for the basics, which strangely enough is hard to find. (The basics being someone grounded, funny, with a clue and an optimistic attitude.) I love reading, writing, the beach, music, film, dogs, food, dancing, and exercise.

I'm a firm believer in that a day is not complete without at least one good hearty laugh. So if you think you're good company are comfortable with yourself and have a few good jokes – I'd love to hear from you.

Can you tell I love to be the center of attention? ;) I have long, blonde hair, blue eyes, and an infectious smile. I LOVE my life, and am so grateful to have the friends and lifestyle that I do. Would love to meet an educated, intelligent, articulate, affectionate, considerate, well-mannered gentleman who knows what he wants from life ... and knows how to get it. "Chat? Date? Tennis?"

Museums, movies, cafes, bookstores, tennis, gardens, beaches, long drives, traveling, San Francisco, Florence, Venice, books of all kinds – some of the things that I find stimulating. Looking for dates now that will eventually become something more. Chemistry is very important, although I understand that this takes work. Intelligence is very important, and to be honest, looks are somewhat important although I don't have a type – it's one of those things you just kinda know. Eventually, I am hoping to find someone who is willing to work on a committed relationship with me.

Since you asked ...

I like to talk about: fine art, movies, past relationship experiences

86. LA CURIOUS AND H

"It's all about the adventures we take ..."

This is a little new to me ... However, I believe that it could be a lot of fun if the right chemistry is there. Life is about the adventures you take. I'm very safe and clean. Humor, culture, and confidence are important. I can't say that I'm not in this for a one-night stand, but I do believe that sex is best when we each know each other's limits and boundaries. Life's about the memories and the least amount of regrets ... right? Have fun ...

87. LEATHERETTE₁₃

"Want to play?"

Well, well ... So here we are, now what?

Are you gonna get some credits and contact me? C'mon ... I don't bite ... at least not through email!

If you like big, beautiful, hourglass femme fatales who love to play (and yes, PLAY in all senses), then we should talk ... and maybe meet! All I am after are playmates – hedonists out to indulge, no strings attached (well, maybe a little rope ...) BONUS: if you happen to be a strapping, studly, leather wearin' butch hottie! grin

I am not interested in bi- or bi-curious women who have hubbys or boy-friends that want to watch or get in on the act. I prefer real dykes who know what they want and aren't afraid to come after it.

"Human Seeking Same"

You should get to know me because I'm not like anyone else! Among other things, I have great legs. I am open-minded. I can't cook. I was raised in the Midwest. I can keep a secret. I will encourage you to follow your dreams. I tell great stories, which will make you laugh. I don't look or act like I'm 41. Until very recently I still had two of my baby teeth, and I can advise you on your screenplay option.

I'm looking for someone who is quick-witted, motivated, honest, affectionate, cute, curious, and responsible yet prone to outbursts of silliness, irreverent, creative, and interested in being my long-term partner in crime. (Yes, I realize that's a lot).

"Love Sees No Color"

"HOW DEEP IS YOUR LOVE?"

Hello:

I am, 25, petite, brn eyes, brn hair. Some say I'm "exotic" looking (whatever that means). I am semi-attached, looking for a discreet, non-psycho/obsessive guy who shares similar interests w/me.

I am very laid back, non-stress/low maintenance. I love to travel & wouldn't mind a weekend getaway to some strange city for some good "clean" fun. I generally prefer Caucasian guys who are in to the surfing/

"Hi! (Keepin' it simple ...)"

Hi there! Do you want to go out? What a coincidence ... me too! I guess we already have that in common!

If you have a great sense of humor and just want to date – not get serious – just have fun and hang out together, then let me know!

I'm 33, Pisces, blue eyes, blue & black hair, curvy/plus, pretty, aww, you get the idea! Anyway, I should warn you that I am not very conservative in nature (but still have a lot of class and am well mannered) but still love to do silly-fun things sometimes or head out for some serious adventure. I tend to be a little shy at first, but once you get past that, I'll talk your ear off and hopefully keep you laughing.

I prefer more androgynous/butch gals who are a contrast to me being called an "edgy femme". Also, I am not interested in bi women who have boyfriends or husbands. Thanks!

So, get some credits already! Drop me a line!

97. METATEMPO

"Artsy type seeking someone with equal passion"

Life is too short to do everything that I'd like to do. I'm always interested in learning, whether it's a deeper knowledge of a familiar subject or something completely new. I'm open-minded but simultaneously opinionated. I care a great deal about my friends and those closest to me know that I would do anything to help them out if they needed it. I'm passionate about the things I care about, whether it's a cause, a friends' success, or personally speaking, and my art (filmmaking). If you are open-minded (hopefully leaning towards the liberal interpretation of the word), intelligent, and have attitude, I want to hear from you. Oh physically speaking, I don't have a "type". I have preferences (androgynous is my pref), but I believe that you can find many people attractive who you ordinarily wouldn't if your personalities really click.

"First, you get the money ..."

I still dunno about this "meet people by not meeting them" web-dating thing, but here goes: East coast, easy-going kinda fella now at home in LA. Tv producing brought me out here (go figure) but tv is not my life. A great talker but not a blabbermouth. Not the life of the party, but always up for a good time. I'm looking for cool people to do cool stuff with. Like who? I lost my perfect match dossier, but let's say she's bright, inquisitive, independent, open to a little sarcasm, and proud of her quirks. A few things I really get up for: movies, flea markets, bad informercials, good fiction, sheepdogs, mom's cats, biking, road tripping, and other whatnot. (BTW: Lavalife's IM doesn't work on my browser, sorry if I appear to ignore anyone.)

107. MY SUNDOWN

"Live and Learn"

I am an open-minded, well-rounded individual. I hate to settle for that which my heart does not desire, it only leaves me hurt in the end. But with that said, life has thrown me quite a few curve balls and I find my self back here once again. (Lavalife).

I'm a very busy person, but I always make time for those who matter and I almost always give people a chance to be someone that matters. I've recently learned the true importance of communication. It's the determinant of whether someone will stay in your life our not.

I like to be surprised as long as it is a good surprise and I am open to try most new things.

I enjoy my time working out. I would like to find someone who wouldn't mind going for walks in the park or even walks along the beach (as cheezy, dating service-like as that may sound).

I'm looking for some one who's 6'1" or taller, with a great sense of humor. I love music and I try to do anything that I can with it. I am hoping to find someone who loves music as much as I do, but as long as you have a passion for something, being a music lover isn't necessary. I have a great sense of humor and that's what I look for in others. If you have any questions feel free to ask. Otherwise I'll leave it at that for now.

110. NEW LA MAN

"HI THERE"

I am spontaneous and fun. I am born and raised in NYC. I have lived there as well as Miami, Chicago and, of course, LA. I recently moved back to LA after two years of being back in NYC and would like to make new friends to spend time with. I have fun doing lots of things from being active, walking my dog, playing tennis, going to movies or out on the town, I like to spend time with people and enjoy life, especially with a great woman. I have never been the possessive or jealous dating type. I can be silly and goofy funny as well as serious and to the point. My friends have always appreciated my great sense of humor and always-optimistic outlook on things. Life is way too short not to always see the positive side of things. I like to write in my spare time. I have been doing this since I was ten years old when I wrote a dungeons and dragons short story. I just finished my first screenplay, a cartoon movie for kids. I read as well having just read all of the Lord of the Rings books for the first time as well as some other books. It is kind of hard to say too much more than this about myself with seeming like over kill or showing off. After this, you will just have to ask me anything that you want to know. I am an open book and have nothing to hide. Drop me a note and say hello sometime.

While I would like to meet the one, that just doesn't happen everyday and in the interim as I get settled into new life in LA it would be nice to meet someone to go out with and have some fun. If the relationship gets serious, that would be great. I would love that. If not, it is ok too.

Hi there!

Welcome to my profile. Thanks for dropping by. I'm originally from the east coast now living in Los Angeles and am looking to meet new friends. I'm not sure how to describe myself to you. Maybe I'll remain a little mysterious and just invite you out so that we can start to get to know each other over a coffee. (Maybe you can help me improve that smile of mine).

If you happen to be unattached and living in the L.A. area, enjoy meeting new people, love movies, fine dinning, literature or just hanging out, send me a smile and I'll get in touch with you.

Hope to hear from you soon.

116. PAPERSTREET

"Radiohead Buckley seeks Fiona Amos in a pick-up truck"

I was a crazy romantic, back in the day, and i kind of miss it. People are too busy to be crazy these days, and i don't like that. Everyone's too careful and too thought out. Don't get me wrong, I think things through – more than most people. But then, most people spend more time on a dinner menu than trying to understand relationships. Color me freaky. Freaky with a heart is a nicer way to put it.

Brace yourself, as I'm gonna get a little brainy, here. I believe that every existentialist is a romantic that's been pushed too far. I've tested this, and it's a dead match every time. Sure, I miss being in love and stuff, but I'm more about living in the now. I'm determined not to let a few heartbreaks change me, though. If you've been through it, you know what I'm talking about. As a social thinker, I'm a bit of a mad scientist. Like all true mad science, I use myself as the subject of many of my experiments ... Once when I was in high school I visited my cousin in Michigan and pretended I was British. It was good for a smile or two. I was always used to being on the outside, anyway. That's where I found the best views.

Oh, yeah, so now the laundry list:

I love motorcycles, hearing good stories, telling good stories, funny conversations, people with guts, dancing, and working on films. I respect people and things that are genuine.

I dislike the timidly cruel, the CHP (before I lost my bike), blind conformity, dogmatic thinking, and people who don't use turn signals.

Good luck. Be happy.

"Life is what you make it."

I am working on using the digital revolution to help solve some of our serious challenges the world faces. I believe being Gay we have much more time to devote to raising the Quality of life, while our straight counterpart is doing their share by raising the Quantity. This will be my contribution for humanity and I really would like to take this on while sharing it with someone I love.

118. PENNYBOOTS

"Love would be great, but I'll settle for a fun date :)"

I'm energetic and independent, often silly, sometimes shy. I love to try new things & go places I've never been. I'm introspective, but not an introvert; assertive, but not aggressive. I'm adventurous, but not a thrill seeker; somewhat of a skeptic, but almost always an optimist. I love going out, but I'm good friends with my couch too. I'm athletic and fit, but I still like food. I like being wined & dined, but the dive bar scene suites me fine too. I'm a bit of a tomboy, but I still wear heels (and enjoy shopping ... even grocery shopping!).

I love animals, listen to NPR way to much, stay up too late for my own good, and spend a healthy amount of time laughing at myself.

If you're articulate & confident but not arrogant; if you have an adventurous palate & a sense of rhythm to go with your smart sense of humor; if you love animals enough to break, even for pigeons; if you have a fit physique & a kind heart; if you have a daily bathing routine but aren't afraid of a little dirt now & then ... don't be shy. Drop me line.

Please show a picture if you contact me.

"Nice Guy Looking for Sweetheart"

This is hard, so I'm just going to write the first things that pop into my head and see how it goes. I have an open mind and I'm always looking to learn something new. I travel as much as I can. I'm carefree, but I'm not careless. There is a difference. I'm a lawyer, but don't hold that against me. I don't watch much tv. - no couch potato here. Basically, I'll do anything, try anything, and go anywhere. I'm into sports and outdoor activities. I play ice hockey. But I'm not a jock. And I still have all my teeth. I go to the movies. I cook. I read. I go out to dinner. I hang with my friends. I go to clubs. I go to the symphony. Whatever. At the end of the day, people are what excite me. If I'm with cool people, or that special someone, it doesn't really matter what you're doing because you're probably going to have a laugh and a good time.

Since you asked ...

My idea of a fun date: dinner, drinks on an outdoor patio, a night of dancing

135. SJMATIC

"Tired of MR. Rightnow"

So here's the deal ... I want friends! You know those people to go to clubs with and hang out with, maybe have over for a fab dinner I slaved over for hours? I do not want people who want to have sex with me and never call again, or pretend to be your friend so long as the party goes on. Not that I am bitter or have had any of these so called friends lately...

So now that that is all out there ... Let me tell you what this perspective friend has to offer. I love to laugh, go out, and have fun! I live to shove fives down go-go boy's briefs, and stay out late. I also love having an intelligent conversation in the morning or going to foreign or indie movies ... There is more but I will save it for our first meeting.

I am also in a period of self discovery ... I have recently lost a bunch of weight and am trying to get in shape. I will never be a gay porn star, but that is ok as I just want to feel better about me.

About you ... Be honest and fun ... other than that I am open 100% to whatever you have to bring ... It would also be cool if you were local (WEHO, Los Angeles, The Valley) so that we can hang out sometime in person.

Have in common?

"SMILEsmileSMILE"

Hello,

To start let me tell you a little about myself. When I am at home I love to have my friends over, listen to music all types and that includes country and rap, but I only listen to rap in the classroom. The kids love that music, and they bitch if I play anything good. The country music I just like. I read quite a bit, and try to stay well informed about our world. The Internet has been great for that. It is great when you can have a glass of red wine while chatting with a friend. I love to cook and I am quite good at it, and I would love to make you dinner sometime that is if we can ever work that out. I am a very tactile person that loves to touch and feel the person I am with. There is nothing better than being with someone you love.

I enjoy being outdoors, and I do a lot of outdoor activities such as rock climb, mountain bike, backpack, roller blade, and run. I run about 20 miles a week, but I just do that because it keeps me in shape to do the things I enjoy to do.

Talk to you soon

"Anyone need a bud?"

MY BACKSTAGE CONTAINS ONLY G RATED PICS NO X OR R!!
Hey, thanks for checkin' me out. First off I like guys who like to laugh and have a good time. If you like someone who likes:

- Kickin' it with a beer and a bud
- Plays pool or darts or goes bowling
- Spends weekends at the beach blading or boarding etc
- Hangs at home (Likes to work around the house too)
- Cuddles by the fire and makes out like crazy
- Knows who Phish, Fred Durst, Lifehouse, Matchbox 20 etc is And LIKES them as well as Pop, Rap, House, Electronic etc
- Likes to travel (Do Vegas with buds a few times a year too)
- Plays video games at arcades
- Likes roller coasters and amusement parks.
- Likes good food but has a craving for junk too!

- Above all likes someone who is monogamous and can make a commitment and really mean it.

Then we would probably get along. :)

I tend to like other white guys who are masculine, and or athletic and outgoing. But I don't limit myself to any one type or person.

Masculinity is very important to me. I would prefer someone who spends more time away from the gay scene. I tend to get hit on by more girls than guys and find I would get along better with guys who are the same. For a frame of reference ... a circuit party boy turns me off ... while a guy who is more average body to nice build and who has a well rounded life really turns me on.

Definitely not into drugs or the boys who use them. I am looking for guys with a sense of adventure and a sense of humor (you gotta laugh at life a lot). Like guys who can be as much at home in a pub having a beer as at the beach biking or blading or boarding or just snuggling by the fire. If u like what you read then shoot me a message. I will most definitely respond to you!

A little to get us started ...

"Looking for a guy who loves sports, food, and laughing as much as I do ..."

Fresh out of the Windy City, I'm looking for someone with whom I can explore what L.A. has to offer. Life is perfect when it includes laughter, passion, adventure, and comfort ... I want to experience all of these at the same time.

I'm a tall, attractive brunette who loves sports, eating (sorry, L.A., but healthy food does not rank highest on my list), and writing – I am generally doing one of those three at any given moment!

I want a man who can respect my strength and still treat me like a woman; proof that chivalry is not dead would definitely be a plus. Fear of life is not welcome – MUST be open to everything life has to offer! After all, it is my own, personal mantra that brought me here ... can't gain anything if you don't risk anything, right?

"Variety is the spice of life"

I am a pretty laid back person who is not afraid to speak up when necessary. I like hiking and camping and lots of other outdoor activities, however, I spend most of my free time in the city hanging out with friends and neighbors. We make dinner and then do whatever comes down the grapevine, whether it's having/going to a party, going to an art show, seeing Friday night jazz at LACMA, seeing a concert/dj, playing games/cards, etc. Doing something is better than nothing. Variety is the spice of life, and any activity is fun when you are with the right group of people. I also like to keep myself informed about what's going on in the world, and I've been known to engage people in the occasional friendly debate/discussion. My favorite spectator sport is baseball (Yankees) although I sometimes have a tough time making it through a whole game outside of the playoffs and Yankee-Red Sox games. I prefer listening to music rather than watching tv and watching movies at home rather than at the theater. I like to drink red wine and my favorite cocktail is a martini (with as many olives as will fit on the toothpick). As far as music goes, my radio is usually set to KCRW.

"I love a monogamous"

Hello Guys.

Well finally I think it's time to give up on love and rather try and find a safe partner to share some special intimate moments with.

However I just want to let you know in advance that I am not to sure that I want to sacrifice my beliefs but who knows maybe the right will be able to change my heart.

I guarantee you honesty and being straight forward so no games please. Just deciding to post this Ad here is difficult enough.

(Hey guys I am sorry but I also don't have credits, it's a long story. The short version being, I lost my Wallet, etc at Ferdinand and Treasure in the Maple area and whoever found it seems to have no intention of returning it.)

Firstly, I am presently on vacation in Toronto.

Honestly I am looking for a very monogamous man, who practices safe sex and value good hygiene. Please be drug-and disease-free. It's not right or just to play with another person's life of emotions.

A nice, sex, handsome stud would be great. By the way, I am versatile but prefer being a top.

I am looking for a discreet guy to hang out with have some fun and preferably show me around the town.

A nice conversation, cuddling by a roaring fire a walk on the beach would be wonderful also.

Let's just say that I am looking for a real quality guy with great values, principles, etc who just seems not be having any luck finding the right guy.

So let's hook up and keep each other warm, being open, faithfully and true to each other until either you or I find Mr. Right and decide it time to go our desperate ways.

Hey who knows we may just find Mr. Right within each other.

Well what more can I say other than life is short so lets make the most of it but above all always remember to be safe and keep it real.

Sweet Dreams!

I'll be waiting. And don't worry about age and looks etc. because I am no prince either.

A little to get us started ...

"Looking for fun and romance ..."

Okay, so what do you want to know? There is something scary about filling in blanks and writing in paragraphs about the "things I look for in a woman." I do know that I want someone who knows how to laugh and is not afraid to be a little goofy from time to time. I want someone who is comfortable in her own skin. Other than that, I never know what I am looking for. It just sort of happens. Suddenly, I look across a crowded room and there it is; a twinkle in the eye, a sly smile ... And then it begins. I am not sure whether or not sparks fly over the internet, but I am willing to give it a try if you are.
